9. ACQUER (Aral-Communisticheskii i Bol'shevoiskii Druzhina Sovetskoi Rossi, tr. = "Anti-Capitalist Society of Revolutionary Movement of Peoples of Russia") An organization with headquarters in Moscow, is presently headed by an unnamed person. Initially the committee consisted of a number of General Vlasov followers who were active in the German Section during the post-war US Occupation Command after World War II. With its members presently comprised of civilians as well as former military officers, this organization is primarily engaged in political activities. Former military personnel also form a part of the organization. The organization called ROB (Russkiiye Osvobodivshiesya Druzhina, tr. = Russian Liberation Movement). Organized along military lines ROB is similar to other Russian organizations of military character in that its principal aim is to organize itself in such a manner as to facilitate the rapid mobilization of all the soldiers in exodus from the Soviet invasion of western Europe. Another organization of a military character subordinate to ACQUER, is SVOD (Soyuz Volnyy Osvobodivshiesya Druzhina, tr. = "The Union of Members of the Liberated Movement"). General Olashevskiy, originally a member of ACQUER, left this organization to form ZAP (a paramilitary organization) he used in above referenced IR-01648, 154-1173). However, some of the others with military background did not want to abandon ACQUER for ed SVOD as a paramilitary organization a hindrance to life.

Most major sources are aware of the probability of Soviet infiltration in the Western regions or vice versa in Germany, particularly in the SAZ. One of the major problems is that of exposing Soviet agents who are trying surreptitiously to disrupt the organizations, create dissension over the members and influence organizational policies in a manner objectionable to the Western Powers.
